LIGHTS, CAMERA, ACTION – Empower Students as Content Creators!

Students love the opportunity to create video content that can emulate their favorite YouTubers. Students in English classes can create how-to videos. Students in math classes can “unbox” a new concept or solution. In social studies or science, students can create review-style videos where they analyze (also pretty high on Bloom’s Taxonomy) popular events, locations, and cultures, or famous figures, inventions, and ideals. Finding ways to have students as content creators in school builds valuable life and career skills that will likely serve them well in their future.
